Rutland-- Its Physical Advantages

UTLAND, "The Marble City," stands at the head of the list in the catalogue of attractive locations in Vermont, the Switzerland of America. What was true of ancient Jerusalem can as appropriately be applied to the city second only in point of numbers in the Green Mountain State—beautiful for situation. Nestling as it does in an amphitheatre of mountains, which throw around the bustling city their battlements of protection, tempering the blasts of winter and cooling the heats of summer; with their ever-changing lights and shadows, their spring and autumn foliage, their matchless sunrises and gorgeous sunsets, their invigorating atmosphere and life-giving water they furnish a never-ending charm for the citizen, the invalid, the tourist or the chance visitor. He who has not seen Rutland at some season of the year has missed one of the most picturesque spots east of the Rocky Mountains.

As a health resort and as a point from which to make excursions to the Adirondacks, Lake Champlain or the White Mountains, Rutland cannot be excelled. Hundreds of automobiles bring summer tourists to this city as a principal point on their expeditions, and all are enthusiastic over the picturesque scenery of this vicinity. A trolley line runs through the principal streets and extends to Center Rutland, West Rutland, Castleton—home of a State Normal School—Hydenville, Fair Haven, and an ideal summer resort, Lake Bomoseen, only fifteen miles distant. Here, a beautiful lake, the shores of which are dotted with summer cottages, up-to-date hotels, with parks and pavilions catering to the amusement-seeking visitor, fishing and boating on the mountain-locked lake makes the place attractive through the long summer. Other no less enchanting spots can be reached in a few hours by steam car, trolley, automobile or carriage in various directions. The trolley line, which makes rapid and convenient transportation through the principal city streets, and to the surrounding towns, is being still further extended, and in a few months cars will be running to Poultney and ultimately to Granville, N. Y., in line with the progress of such means of conveyance throughout the country. In all such improvements Rutland is keeping abreast of the times.

Mountain climbing is one of the attractions of the city, the views obtainable from the sky-piercing summits of Mount Killington, 4,241 feet high, the second loftiest summit in the Green Mountain range, Pico and Shrewsbury on the east, and the Taconic range, Herrick and Birdseye on the western edge of the city's mountain cradle, are indescribable. The city lies 562 feet above the sea level, an elevation which insures air that is bracing and free from the malaria of lower altitudes. The heat of summer is tempered by the protecting, forest covered hills, and the severity of winter is lessened because of the mountain shelter.

Its Commercial Advantages

THE location, geographically, of Rutland renders it desirable as a place of business, both for the thirty principal plants now in operation here—plants whose total payroll amounts to a million and a half dollars every year and whose output goes to all parts of this country and to foreign lands—as well as for those who are seeking an advantageous point in which to carry on their enterprises. This city is the gateway to Vermont, the greatest railroad center in the State. Four trunk line roads converge here, and with more than one hundred trains daily passing through our railroad yard and enjoying the same freight rate as New York and Boston, it is easy to see the commercial advantages of the situation. Rutland is only one hundred miles from Albany, two hundred thirty-four miles from New York, and but one hundred sixty-seven miles from Boston. Rapid, frequent and competing means of communication with these chief cities, as well as all intermediate points, renders the location of The Marble City ideal for the investor, the manufacturer, the business world in all its ramifications.

Draw a circle of twenty-five miles with Rutland for a center and you have enclosed a tract of country producing more and better marble than any other spot on the planet, or all other marble industries combined. Within a radius of six miles of The Marble City four thousand men are employed blasting the finest quality of marble in the world out of the everlasting mountains, and with modern appliances and skillful fingers transforming the huge blocks into the finished material, which is the wonder and admiration of all.

Rutland has four national banks, two savings banks and two trust companies, having in the aggregate the largest banking capital of any city of its size on earth. It must not be understood that the marble business is the chief of our occupation; the city is the greatest manufacturing center of northern New England and the hum of business is constantly heard. Over one hundred manufacturing establishments, the largest employing over five hundred men and sending its finished products to all parts of the world, tell of the vast variety of the city's industries. To give a catalogue of the various enterprises carried on here would occupy too much of our space. Suffice it to say that marble in all its perfection and adaptability, scales of almost every conceivable variety, stoneworking machinery, machinery and iron parts of all description, car and engine supplies, stove linings, plaster, cement products, silos, creamery and dairy goods, women's clothing, men's shirts and collars, monuments of marble and granite, carriages, sleighs, chair stock, sand pumps, tin cans for food packing, mailing boxes, flags, decorations and aviation tents, sugar makers' supplies and confectionery are among the varied industries which occupy the attention of the wage earner and make this an ideal home for the mechanic and skilled laborer.

Its Home-Making Advantages

Rutland is a city of homes. The floating population forms but a small part of its citizenry. In the great majority of cases the residents are here because of the advantages to be derived thereby. Those who have children to educate should carefully consider the privileges offered by Rutland schools, whose curriculum is adapted to all sorts and conditions of mental ability, and under careful supervision is steadily rising in teaching quality and advanced systems of instruction. There are four well-equipped libraries in the city, where thoroughly trained custodians are always ready to assist the student and the investigator.

To the American parents, dissatisfied with their environment, casting about for an ideal location in which to educate their children, a place of residence free from the objections of a heterogeneous population, where conservative ideas prevail, and the principles and practices of the founders of the Green Mountain State still hold sway, Rutland presents peculiar attractions. A home-seeker would need to go far and search diligently to find a community representing so much that is modern, up-to-the-minute, and at the same time so free from the demoralizing influences that render so many once-noted New England cities undesirable as a place to rear and educate children.

Rutland has its full quota of churches, all the leading denominations being represented, their pulpits occupied by earnest spiritual preachers, supported by a great body of the laity. Rutland is a church-going, Sabbath-keeping municipality. Two daily papers, one of them having Associated Press service, put the news of the world into the reader's hand every day.

The social and literary advantages make Rutland famous. The Woman's Club is composed of earnest, aggressive women, occupying apartments in a central locality and interesting itself in all sorts of devices for civic improvement, its annual activities comprising a wide range of subjects, and making itself felt in numberless directions as an important factor. The Country Club, with its high class membership, its extensive quarters, its social features, is well and favorably known throughout the State. The various fraternities, both for men and women, have a full representation here, and extend the hand of fellowship to every new arrival.

The city of Rutland is growing in every direction. It is breaking out of its boundaries on all sides. So diversified are its natural features that cheap and desirable building sites are available to the possessor of small means as well as large financial ability. Hundreds of employes in the various manufacturing concerns of the city have acquired neat and comfortable homes, the evidences of habits of thrift, economy and foresight, resulting in comparative ease, being everywhere apparent. What has been done in this direction others can do. Without any particular building boom, year by year residences are being erected in all directions by people who expect to live and die in the homes they are building. Rutland is emphatically a city of homes.

Flowers at Hunt's

If you would know the fairest sight your eyes can ever see,
Where perfect flowers and plants are green, to Hunt's then come with me.
Why! never since flowers began to bloom, was such a glorious show
Of all the best that people need, found in one place to grow.

The plants are all the very best that ever eyes have seen,
The perfect rose, the green carnation, in fact are perfect dreams;
The ferns and bulbs are matchless; to us please lend an ear,
For flowers or prices either, no rivals do we fear.

If you should wish some violets, we make in corsage neat,
Or royal carnations, in sprays that's hard to beat.
If you wish a design, at a reasonable rate,
Send to Hunt's, you may be sure it will be his own make.

FINE MONUMENTAL WORK

245-249 West Street,

Rutland, Vermont.

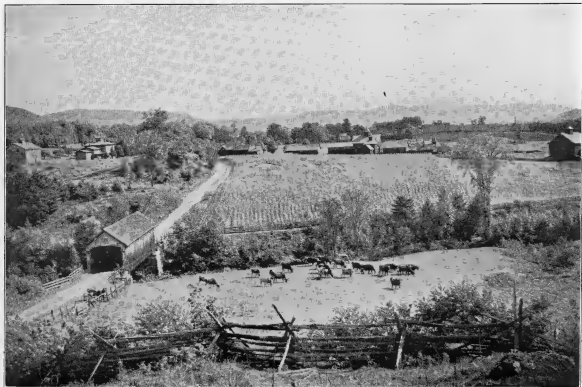

For more than twenty-five years now, we have been making monuments. We have striven very hard and we think with some success to get into the front ranks in the manufacture of same. It is our constant aim to keep strictly up-to-date in the matter of artistic designs and in business methods. In the purchase of a Monument three important points should be given consideration;

FIRST: The reliability of the manufacturer,

SECOND: The matter of suitable design and

THIRD: The price.

The purchaser who puts the last consideration first will often make a very serious mistake. We aim to keep our prices just as low as is consistent with first class stock and work. That is all. If you want a thoroughly made monument, something that we can stand right back of in every respect, we would be glad to have you give us a call. We set up work complete in any cemetery without any trouble or annoyance to you. If you cannot call, just write us and we will submit designs and prices.
